European roulette, benefiting from its lack of a double zero pocket, generally boasts a lower house edge compared to American roulette. This lower house edge provides players with a slightly better chance of winning. In American roulette, the house edge is 5.26%, while in European roulette, it is 2.70%. This difference is due to the presence of the double zero pocket in American roulette, which increases the number of losing outcomes. For example, a straight bet on a single number in American roulette has 37 losing outcomes and 1 winning outcome, resulting in 37 to 1 odds. In European roulette, there are only 36 losing outcomes and 1 winning outcome, resulting in 36 to 1 odds. This difference in odds is what gives European roulette its lower house edge. In both cases, however, the roulette payout for straight bets is 35 to 1. This means that for every 1 unit bet, you will win 35 units if you are correct. The house edge is the percentage of each bet that the casino expects to keep over the long run. In the case of European roulette, the house edge is 2.70%, while in American roulette, it is 5.26%. This means that for every 100 units bet, the casino expects to keep 2.70 units in European roulette and 5.26 units in American roulette. This difference is what makes European roulette a more favorable game for players. In both cases, however, the roulette payout for straight bets is 35 to 1.
